The Daily Courant.

Monday, November 1. 1714.

Hague, November 1.

'THE Lords Deputies of the Province of Holland have represented to the Assembly of the States-General, that the Ratifications of the Treaty of Peace and Commerce between the King of Spain and this State being at last exchanged, 'tis proper to think of naming an Ambassador to be sent to reside at that Court to have Care of the Interests of the State, and at the same time to reclaim divers Ships belonging to the Subjects of this Republick, which have been siezed since the Peace was signed by Spanish Ships, as well in the Ocean as in the Mediterranean: And as an Affair of that Nature cannot admit of Delay, 'tis necessary to Name immediately a fit Person for that Employment. The States have caused Orders to be given to the Consuls who are named to go to reside at the maritime Parts of Spain, not to depart till their Instructions are ready. The Instructions which are drawn up for the Consul designed for Cadix are very Ample, and contain among other things, that he shall have a watchful Eye to prevent the introducing any Novelties against the Subjects of this State, as they have done towards the English Merchants, to the great Prejudice of the Commerce of that Nation there.

'Upon the Offer of the most Christian King (made here by his Ambassador) of his good Offices towards settling the Peace in the North, Prince Kurakin has declared by Order of his Master to the same Ambassador, that his Czarian Majesty still persists in his Intentions to make a Peace with the King of Sweden upon reasonable Terms for him and his Allies, but his Majesty could not forbear desiring beforehand to know on what Foot the King of France has a Design to do those Offices, seeing that hitherto his Ministers, as well at Constantinople as at Berlin and Rastadt, have unanimously employed themselves in favour of Sweden, and against the Interests of the Czar; so that if France will continue the same Measures, it can be only the King of Sweden who can Profit by his good Offices. The Ambassador answered, that the Orders he had upon the Affairs of the North were only to procure a Peace without favouring any one of the Parties engaged in the War above the other: That he had no knowledge of what had passed at Constantinople or at Berlin, but for that at Rastadt he knew well that the Ministers of France had indeed offered to insert an Article in the Treaty relating to the Swedish Provinces in Germany conformable to the Peace of Westphalia, but for that the King of France could not be accused of any Partiality.

'The Minister of Sweden, Baron Palmquist, has lately presented a Memorial in Latin to the States, to demand the Succours stipulated for Sweden in her Alliance with this Republick, which the States can no longer delay the Execution of, seeing that Peace being now made on every Side, the pretence of a burthensome War which has hitherto been used can no longer have Place. But 'tis not supposed that much Regard will be had to this fresh Instance, the rather because this Minister has not yet talked of the least Satisfaction for the Ships which the Swedish Privateers have so unjustly taken from the Subjects of this State; and besides, 'tis not agreed here that there are such Engagements in form between this State and Sweden as that Memorial sets forth.

'The Minister of Hesse Cassel is going to make a Journey to France, upon the pretence of Congratulating the most Christian King upon the Peace concluded with the Emperour and Empire; but 'tis not doubted that that Minister (M. Dalwig) has other secret Commissions, seeing it cannot be comprehended why the Landgrave of Hesse should make such haste to Compliment the King of France upon the Peace, before the Emperour as Head of the Empire has yet done any thing like it.

'The Affair of Mardyke begins to make a great Noise, since it has been understood that his Britannick Majesty intends that they shall not finish the Port, much less fortify it.

'A certain Minister who resides at Barleduc in Lorrain writes, That the Pretender has lately received a very consolatory Letter from the Pope, wherein his Holyness offers his Assistance in the present Conjuncture, and assures him that if he has a design to come to Rome he shall be very welcome there, and that at the first Promotion he shall have a Cardinal's Hat, which he may take till something better offers. 'Tis not doubted that the Pretender will accept these Offers of the Pope, and the rather because we have also Advice that the Duke of Lorrain has given him to understand, that such great Instances are made to him to cause him to depart from his Territories, that he was obliged, though with great Reluctance, to desire him to choose some other Place for his Residence. That Duke has named the Marquis de Lamberti to go immediately to the Court of England in Quality of his Envoy extraordinary, to Compliment his Britannick Majesty upon his Accession to the Crown, and to communicate, as 'tis supposed, the Resolution he has taken with relation to the Pretender.

'The Letters from Stockholm, Leval and Gluckstadt declare they cannot enough express the Consternation the People of Bothnia are in upon the Invasion of the Muscovites, who to the Number of 5000 Men have passed the Gulph of Bothnia, and sacked and burnt the City of Uhma in WestBothnia with all the neighbouring Villages, after having taken seven Ships laden with Provisions for Stockholm; and in regard that a greater Number as well Horse as Foot are to pass over upon flat-bottom Boats, there is an universal Alarm in that Province, and the more since they are already advanced as far as Jacobstadt, and have discovered a Pass of the Gulph which will much facilitate their Invasions, the Swedish Forces being at the same time very far from them.

London, November 1.

On Friday last Sir William Humphries, Kt. was sworn Lord Mayor of London at the Exchequer-Bar at Westminster, and returned to Guildhall with the usual Solemnity. On which Occasion his Majesty, and their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, with the two young Princesses their Daughters, were pleased to Honour the City with their Presence. His Majesty sat in a Balcony over-against Bow-Church, under a Canopy of Crimson Velvet, with the Princess on his Right and the Prince on his Left, and the young Princesses with the Ladies at the other end of the same Balcony, to see the Show pass by. The respective Companies of the City, the Artillery Company, the several Officers belonging to the City, the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen, all appeared in the fullest and most compleat Order, with the accustomed Formalities. After the Lord Mayor was passed by, his Majesty the Prince and the Princess were conducted to Guildhall, where a magnificent Dinner was prepared. The King upon his Entrance went up into the Mayor's Court, and thence into the Long Gallery, where a great Number of Ladies who had been invited to the Feast being present, his Majesty was pleased to salute them: And after some short stay there, the King Prince and Princess went down into the Hall, and then advanced into the Hustings Court, where having placed themselves under a Canopy at the Table, his Majesty had the Goodness to cause the Lady Mayoress to come and sit at the same Table, and was pleased also to grant the same Favour to the Ladies of the Court who attended the Princess. The Lords and others of his Majesty's most honourable Privy-Council, the principal Ministers of State, the foreign Ministers, the Judges and Serjeants, were entertained at several Tables in the body of the Hall. The Hall was hung round with rich Tapistry, and in the Gallery over the Steps were placed an excellent Consort of Musick. The Feast was the most sumptuous and best ordered that has been seen, and the whole Company declared an intire Satisfaction. His Majesty appeared the whole Day to be very well pleased with the Entertainment, and seemed to intend to confer the Honour of Knighthood, pausing some time before his departure in expectance, 'tis supposed, that some should have been presented. The young Princesses did not go to Guildhall, but after some Refreshments at Mr. Taylor's (the House where they stood to see the Show) went back to Court. His Majesty with the Prince and Princess returned to St. James's about Eight in the Evening, the Windows being all along illuminated with vast Numbers of Candles, and the People expressing their Affection by continued Huzza's, as they had done before at the times the Royal Family passed into the City. In short, there has at no time been seen a more general Joy, Pleasure, and more Dutiful Affections in Subjects, nor a more visible Appearance of gracious Favour in a Sovereign, than was that Day.
